an age long, long ago,
before the white man came looking for gold and silver, before the cattle grazed and,
the ranchers carved their holdings,
The Washoe, Numu and Shoshone
Roamed the valley below.

Each spring they searched for game in the higher basins,
At the head streams and the glacial lakes,
And into the passes that cut through the Eastern Sierra.

Here amid the peaks they saw the world,
The clouds would billow into majestic forms,
A rolling clap of thunder would resound in the valley,
And the seasonal rains would wash the forest.

Steeped in the romance of Indian legend, Forest Creek Village at Mammoth truly is
"A village for all seasons..."
